WAKEFIELD COMPANY PROVIDES IT PROTECTION

Inkopo Limited, a new technology business development company in Normanton, Wakefield, has been appointed by North of England distributors SecuriQuest as the local distributor of PROTECTOR – an innovative new card designed for installation into computers to restore and recover PCs instantly in case of failure caused by software problems.

The Protector card sits in the computer and protects it against problems encountered across the full IT spectrum from computer crashes and corrupted files to sabotage and viruses. Software failures and many others can now be resolved at the push of a button and the PC is automatically and seamlessly restored.

Commenting on the new card, Darren Morris, contracts manager for Inkopo Limited said: "Quite simply, the Protector takes a snapshot of all the information needed to recover the Hard Drive and puts it in a dynamic partition which it then protects. IT administrators can now significantly reduce computer downtime, technician time, lost productivity and the costs associated with backup and IT support thanks to this useful piece of equipment. In fact it has the potential to save up to 80 per cent of support costs."

"UK businesses can see the importance of computer software they use, but very often fail to put a contingency plan in place in case of malfunctions, which can be high impact, especially if an operating system is corrupted and a technician has to attend, resulting in costly downtime. We can now offer the Protector card to all existing and potential Inkopo customers with a Windows based computer," Darren Morris continued.

The Protector is perfect for schools, colleges, universities and internet cafes as it practically guarantees 100 per cent uptime for computer users and is essential for businesses who operate in an increasingly computer dependent environment.

Inkopo was formerly known as UniVentures, Leeds Metropolitan University's business development arm, before branching out on its own in a groundbreaking deal earlier this year. The company advises and supports technology start-ups and innovative projects, matching its experience and understanding of universities with private sector clients.
